If you missed the first ever Charlotte Wine & Tapas Week in April, do not fret. The fall edition of this 10-day culinary celebration will take place on October 13-22, 2017 with over 35 of Charlotte's best restaurants participating.

Sometimes all you want is a taste – just a few little plates of different items to share. The creators of Charlotte Wine and Tapas Week decided to make a week of it, and the spring event was a huge success.

Charlotte Wine & Tapas Week founder Phong Luong, owner of Zen Asian Fusion in Dilworth, came up with the clever concept. "Everyone loves tasting new flavors in food and wine, and it's always fun to share. Little plates are a great way to try just a taste, and customers can sample different wines from around the world."

During the celebration of tastes, each participating restaurant offers a pre-selected menu of wine and tapas pairings for $30-$35 per person, depending on the restaurant. Two glasses of wine of your choosing are served with with any two of the tapas plates on the menu. Diners can order again and again, each time at the $30-$35 per pop; and they can share.

The Charlotte chefs and restaurants involved in the first week of little tastes pulled out all the stops. For information and list of this season's participating restaurants visit charlottewinetapasweek.com. ■
