Allegro's philosophy combines movement instruction with medical and educational expertise, creating new techniques to teach children with disabilities and enhance their quality of life.

Life Experiences Led Him to This Cause

Fresh off Panther Training Camp, Charlotte Living had a chance to chat with Defensive End, Kony Ealy, and talk about an important addition to his personal roster. Entering his third season with the Panthers, this year he kicks-off a new role as he signs on as spokesperson to bring added awareness to the Allegro Foundation... a Champion for Children with Disabilities.

"I have a personal connection with this cause and the children who benefit from Allegro," said Carolina Panther Defensive End, Ealy. He is the youngest of eleven children, growing up with a sister, now 25, who lives with a rare chromosome disorder that left her in need of full time care. "Seeing these children who were so active, responsive and happy reminded me of my sister. I fell in love with the program."

The Charlotte-based Allegro Foundation provides FREE Movement Education classes to thousands of children living with disabilities in Charlotte and the surrounding communities on a weekly basis. Allegro's philosophy combines movement instruction with medical and educational expertise, creating new techniques to teach children with disabilities and enhance their quality of life.

"We are very excited to partner with Kony Ealy," said Pat Farmer, the Founder and President of Allegro Foundation. "He has demonstrated a genuine desire and interest in our programs and the children that we serve, and we are proud to have him be a part of the Allegro family."

KONY EALY IN THE SUPER BOWL

Carolina Panther Defensive End Kony Ealy made history at Super Bowl 50 against the Denver Broncos with four tackles, three sacks, two forced fumbles, two tackles for loss, one interception, one fumble recovery, and one pass deflection. Notable coaches, players, and analysts said he would have been the hands-down MVP if his team had won. A new season has begun, and Kony is ready for another outstanding year with the Panthers.
